This man is one of the prominent national and international personages of the century.

He has made the statement, "Remember always that all of us are descended from immigrants."

And he can directly trace his ancestors on both sides of his family from Mayflower passengers.

The picture of him here was taken when he was in Paris after World War I as a prominent member of the navy department.

A little known fact about him is that Sumner Welles, assistant secretary of state is a distant relative of his.

Besides being "No. 1 Copy" in all news-services, he is a famous radio personage.

His first ancestor in America, a Dutchman, ran away to sea when he was 18 years old. He lived among the Indians along the Hudson seven years before the Pilgrims landed.

Now, today this person IN THE SPOTLIGHT is also living on an estate along the same river.

Soldiers of Production

America's "soldiers of production," men and women working in the plants of American industry, have their uniforms, too. Some uniforms worn by G-E workers on vital production jobs are shown below.

1. Not a gas mask, but a special nose mask to guard his breathing, is worn by this spray painter at his job in one of the General Electric plants.

2. Like a man from Mars, the "cold room" research man is, a strange sight as he tests airplane instruments for high-altitude performance in a G-E laboratory.

3. Frankenstein? No, just another G-E worker. His job is sandblasting turbine castings for Uncle Sam's ships at one of the General Electric plants.

4. The helmet he wears is to protect him from light! The rays from a welder's arc could cause blindness if he did not wear this strange headgear.

Milk Distribution Changes Pending

Labor, Transportation, Material Shortages Reason

By T. G. STITTS

(Chief of Co-Op Research and Service, Farm Credit Administration, Washington, D. C.)

Shortages of critical materials and resources threaten to bring about more dramatic changes in milk distribution methods within the short space of a few weeks than the combined forces of competition and industrial ingenuity have brought about in the past few years.

Shortages of rubber, labor, trucks, machinery, paper and possibly other materials may accentuate the trend away from home delivery, speed up every-other-day delivery, cause zoning of sales areas and may spell the end of special delivery series and particular special services.

These war-time factors overshadow temporarily the longer-run trend toward new methods of distribution which have been going on for several years in the fluid milk industry. These longer-run developments, however, retain a basic importance not only during the war but in the post-war period.

Paper Instead of Metal

The introduction of paper containers, growth of gallon and half-gallon containers, increase in store sales, increased sale of special milks, growth of peddlers, use of retail price-quantity discount schemes and development of all wholesale dealers are among the more important recent changes that were well under way in several larger cities before the defense and the war emergency developed.

From experiences so far, it is difficult to conclude how many of these changes will be permanent. Many of them will be, but others may prove to be unsatisfactory for one reason or another.

Put Your Efficient REFRIGERATOR In Command Of Food Conservation

With fewer food and milk deliveries . . . and with the necessity of preventing spoilage of even the smallest amount of food . . . it is important that all the space in your refrigerator works for you. Store only those foods that need refrigeration . . . no cans, cartons and other foods which keep on the shelves just as well. Of course, you should make sure that your refrigerator is efficient . . . that proper temperature is maintained; that door gaskets are tight; that it is defrosted regularly. This is especially important in the hot summer months when the refrigerator does most work.
